

Economics Department

An economics major is unusual because an undergraduate degree is not only a traditional liberal arts major but also functions as a beginning professional degree. The Department supports students in the liberal arts foundations portions of AugCore with a focus not only on the content of the discipline but how it to view diversity and international issues using economic principles.

The Department is involved in interdisciplinary programs with a variety of departments including Business, Computer Science, Mathematics and Political Science. We support professional students while they earn degrees in Business, Education and Social Work.

We promote interdisciplinary discussions from our beginning principles courses through our keystone course. Our keystone class is an economics research methods class where students learn to work together and often venture into the wider world to present their research and test their intended vocation.
